

Ars Theologica Scholarly Journal

The Ars Theologica scholarly journal (forthcoming) complements the imprint's book publishing program through the publication of scientific articles, interdisciplinary studies, and academic book reviews. The journal provides a periodic framework for scholarly dialogue and evaluation, contributing to the consolidation of theological research within both the Romanian and the broader European context. Through rigorous academic review processes and openness to contributions from diverse university environments, the publication aims to ensure high standards of quality and scholarly relevance.

The journal seeks to stimulate critical debate on contemporary theological themes, encourage interdisciplinary approaches, and facilitate the integration of Romanian research into the international academic landscape. In addition, by publishing reviews and critical analyses of recent books, it will contribute to mapping current research directions and fostering a culture of rigorous academic evaluation. In this way, the Ars Theologica journal aspires to become a stable platform for scholarly reflection and dialogue, supporting the continuous development of theological studies and its responsible interaction with other fields within the humanities.
